About us

Since 2005, the Newton Haunted House has been raising money for charitable causes, such as the Greater Boston Food Bank and local homeless shelters. In 2010, we received 400 visitors and raised over $2500 for the Food Bank.

The haunted house was the idea of Sophia Barrett, age 6 (at the time). Her mother, Lisa Feldman Barrett, Ph.D., is an internationally-renowned psychologist and cognitive neuroscientist who uses her research on human emotion to make the haunted house scarier. Sophia's father, Daniel Barrett, Ph.D., is a computer scientist who constructs the house each year.

In 2008, The Greater Boston Food Bank featured Sophia in their official fundraising video and recognized her at their annual banquet. You can see the video on our web site, www.blazemonger.com/halloween.

Corporate Sponsorship

Help fight hunger by sponsoring the Newton Haunted House this year! We list all sponsors prominently at the house entrance and on our web site.

You can choose from several levels of sponsorship, suitable to businesses of different sizes:

Bronze level: FEED THE MONSTERS

Help our hard-working volunteers by donating food and drink for them after the event.

Silver level: FEED THE VICTIMS

Donate baked goods (Halloween-themed, of course) for us to sell to visitors. All revenue is donated to charity.

Gold level: DONATE FUNDS

Donations of any amount will be forwarded to the Greater Boston Food Bank.

Platinum level: MATCHING FUNDS

By matching our ticket sales dollar for dollar, you'll double the amount donated to charity.

The Haunted House

The Newton Haunted House features over a dozen live "monsters": mostly graduate students and postdoctoral fellows from the Interdisciplinary Affective Science Lab, directed by Lisa Feldman Barrett.

The Haunted House is also filled with spooky props, and features three different "levels" of scariness for age-appropriate chills.
